

Who is the person looking at you? This is what nature would look like if it were a person. At least that is how the author of this illustration imagines it. Of course, you may have a completely different vision; soon we will even offer to create one for you.

Nature is an immense whole, consisting of an uncountable number of living organisms. But thanks to our imagination we can see it as a single figure. This representation is called personification. This is a great way with the help of which we can tame, befriend and communicate with phenomena as complex and difficult to grasp as nature itself.

For now, try to feel what emotions this character evokes in you? Sympathy, fear, surprise? Or maybe it makes you laugh? Or is he indifferent to you? In the white space, write down or express by drawing or colour everything you feel about this person. You can also paint an imaginary creature which personifies your feelings.
